JOHNSON C. SMITH UNIVERSITY
CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA
CHARLOTTE

Charlotte, the largest city in the Carolinas is settled at the crossroads of the Piedmont Carolinas and near the border in North Carolina. Charlotte was the place of the signing of the Mecklenburg Declaration, predecessor to the Declaration of Independence. By such a background and such a history Charlotte sets due store, and likes to remember that it is no upstart community. But men worthy of their salt must build, and a city, to be worth its spot on the map, must go forward.

So Charlotte has progressed. Though blessed with no great single natural advantage, such as deep water, or the junction of railways, the little town that was Charlotte long ago decided upon the direction it would take. It was ambitious. It was alert. It was proud, but not to the point of lost energy. It had vision. It would go forward!

As a result—Charlotte's estimated population growth for 1946 is 115,000. Originally and historically Charlotte has grown from a community of Scotch-Irish.

Charlotte's schools bulwark city's tomorrow. Making up the city's public school system—elementary, junior high, senior—are 21 white and 8 Negro schools. Among the other educational institutions for higher education numbers Johnson C. Smith University.

Charlotte's habits include going to church. In the city are 92 churches representing 27 denominations.

Charlotte's hospitals reflect medical prestige. Charlotte ranks medically with the top handful of cities under 500,000 population in the United States, and only one of comparable size ranks with Charlotte.

Charlotte's play season never closes, its cultural life is full and varied, its industry varied in non-textile lines, its utilities offer low rates with good service and it is also the financial capital of the Carolinas.

Come and see for yourself—CHARLOTTE, THE QUEEN CITY OF THE SOUTH.

The Doctor and His Plea for Peace

"Lord, who on earth did minister
   To those who helpless lay,
Guide now the doctor who fulfills
   Thy golden rule today;
From Thy great store of wisdom fill
   His mind and give anew
Thy strength while hours are long
   And work seems more than he can do."

Thirteen years ago, Dr. E. E. Blackman, in his capacity as President of the Old North State Medical Dental and Pharmaceutical Society, Inc., issued "A Call To Arms." Today as your chief executive officer, we desire to make "A Plea For Peace." A peace that may, not only make former enemies free from bias, but may also rehabilitate torn areas; correct distorted ideas and ideals; disarm belligerents and create a desire for world-wide unity, along with a tranquility that must not be flaunted.

The main purpose of physicians everywhere, of every race, creed and color in this universal upheaval, must be consecrated upon a peace with disease carrying and disease producing germs of every description, to the end that, they be purged of their lethal contents, to the delight of morbid humanity and to the satisfaction of those of us who are trying so vigorously to relegate them to the limbo of forgotten competition.

The practice of medicine is a noble undertaking fraught with earnest endeavor and diligent business and its votaries must be surcharged with an indomitable will and laudable intent to accomplish worthwhile goals in our aim to obviate the tendency to death. Working in the spirit and concurring with the sentiment of the celebrated physician and poet, Oliver Wendell Holmes, that "Medicine is the most difficult of sciences and the most laborious of arts."

Then, when we have performed to our utmost capacity; when we have made all but the supreme sacrifice in the spirit and heroism of the greatest physician of them all, may we exclaim as we proclaim the sentiments of the world-famous Venetian surgeon, Dr. Adolph Lorenz, "that every day in every way, the world grows better and better."

—J. Bustee Davis, Sr., M.D.,
President.
